

“If you’ve met one person with autism, you’ve met one person with autism.”

– Dr. Stephen Shore, professor and self-advocate

www.ascv.org

All autistic individuals and their families deserve access to high-quality programs, support services, and community-based activities.

www.ascv.org

Autism presents differently across genders.

www.ascv.org

Some people with autism use verbal language, and others do not. Just because someone doesn’t talk out loud doesn’t mean they don’t have things to say or share.

www.ascv.org

“If you’ve met one person with autism, you’ve met one person with autism.”

– Dr. Stephen Shore, professor and self-advocate

www.ascv.org

Every person with autism is unique in what they like, what they are good at, how they learn, and the things that might be hard for them.

www.ascv.org

The term autism spectrum is used because the range of support needs can occur in any combination and can range from mild to very severe.

www.ascv.org

1 in 44 children in the United States are identified as being on the autism spectrum.

www.ascv.org